Local customs:

The communities we work with are Buddhist, Muslim and Moken sea gypsy communities, and we ask visitors to be respectful of these local cultures. Please see our website for further guidelines on in-village code of conduct.

Community benefits:

The villagers – the guides, host families, handicraft cooperatives – receive fair wages as stipulated by the Community-based Tourism Committee. Andaman Discoveries ensures that the majority of the money generated by each tour goes directly to the villagers. A portion of guests' in-village costs are donated to the community fund that is managed by the villagers. The fund provides financial support for community initiatives and projects in the village. This creates concrete economic opportunities for the villagers, who may otherwise have to seek employment outside of the village.

About Andaman Discoveries:

Andaman Discoveries is a social enterprise that enables visitors and volunteers to directly support community-led development, conservation, education and cultural empowerment. In 2007 Andaman Discoveries won the Virgin Holidays Responsible Tourism Awards for the Best for Preservation of Cultural Heritage, the biggest awards of their kind in the world. In 2008 we won the Global Vision Travel and Leisure Award for tourism organizations dedicated to innovation and setting new standards in travel and tourism while working with the environment around them. We also won the SEED Awards for Entrepreneurship and Sustainable Development, which recognize locally-driven, entrepreneurial partnerships in developing countries that build capacity, strengthen livelihoods and conserve natural resources and eco-systems.

In 2009, we have been short-listed as a finalist in the Wild Asia's Responsible Tourism Awards, as well as one of twelve Finalists for the BBC World Challenge Awards, a global competition which aims to find projects or small businesses that have demonstrated enterprise and innovation at a grassroots level.
